Trial Tech: Learn How to Effectively use Technology to Bolster your Defense

Presented by Michael Estok and River City Media

Please join us for a panel discussion regarding trials in the post-pandemic era with a focus on technology challenges, changes, and innovations. Experienced trial Attorney Michael Estok from Lindsay Hart, and River City Media provide insight for how to use trial technology to present the best defense. Our speakers will provide observations, tips, and reflections on trying cases in the past year in both Oregon and Washington, and how technology has impacted those trials. With the increased use of remote video appearances and improvements to courtroom technology, now more than ever attorneys should learn the tips and tricks to seamlessly present a compelling case to the jury.

Michael Estok

Michael Estok is a litigator representing a diverse mix of clients in Oregon and Washington in areas including commercial law, professional liability (on behalf of physicians, hospitals, long-term care facilities, attorneys, and accountants), products liability, employment, securities, class actions, and appeals. He has successfully tried many cases before judges, arbitrators, and juries. In every case, Michael seeks to obtain a deep understanding of his client's business or area of professional practice, which he believes to be essential to effective legal representation. Michael's background in accounting, for example, gives him unique insight into how his client's business operates and how it can be best served through litigation.

Michael also serves as a member on the amicus brief committee for the Oregon Association of Defense Counsel.

River City Media

River City Media's staff of experienced litigation consultants allows clients to focus on their cases without worrying about technical issues.
